About the book:

Vancouver Cooks 2 contributes to Canada's culinary culture by showcasing West Coast ingredients and the highly individual ways in which 70 diverse top and emerging chefs are using them. The innovative recipes are well tested and edited with home cooks in mind, encouraging them to think outside of the proverbial recipe box, but still suitable for experienced cooks. One of the most interesting features is the chef profiles. Who knew so many French Canadian chefs work in Vancouver?

About the society and editors:

The Chefs Table Society of British Columbia is a registered, non-profit collaborative dedicated to creating a foundation for the exchange of information between culinary professionals throughout the province. The society supports innovative and sustainable programs that inspire, educate and nurture chefs, producers and the local food industry.

Joan Cross has co-edited several other cookbooks. Chef Jamie Maw is a founding member of the Chef's Table Society, and chef Andrew Morrison is founder of Vancouver's online food and culture magazine, Scout. For more information, see <http://www.chefstablesociety.com>.
